Section 96.5-2-a – Discharge

STATEMENT OF THE CASE:

Tyson Fresh Meats, Inc. (employer) appealed a representative's April 24, 2006 decision (reference 01) that concluded Nesffy F. Molina (claimant) was qualified to receive unemployment insurance benefits after a separation from employment. After hearing notices were mailed to the parties' last-known addresses of record, a telephone hearing was held on May 16, 2006. The claimant participated in the hearing. Jerome Rincken appeared on the employer's behalf. Based on the evidence, the arguments of the parties, and the law, the administrative law judge enters the following findings of fact, reasoning and conclusions of law, and decision.

ISSUE:

Was the claimant discharged for work-connected misconduct?

FINDINGS OF FACT:

The claimant started working for the employer on July 18, 2000. He worked full time as a load out employee at the employer's Waterloo, Iowa pork slaughter and processing facility. His last day of work was March 30, 2006. The employer discharged him on April 4, 2006. The reason asserted for the discharge was an altercation with another employee.

On March 30 the claimant was passing by another work room and paused to speak to another employee in that room. A third employee in the room (Paul) told the claimant to leave; the claimant refused. Paul came over to the claimant and grabbed his coat and shook him. He then told the claimant again to leave. The claimant again refused, so Paul pushed the claimant's hardhat and glasses down onto the claimant's face. In attempting to get away from Paul, the claimant's movements caused a hand scanner in Paul's hand to fall to the floor. Paul ordered the claimant to pick up the scanner, and the claimant refused. Paul turned to walk away; the claimant then picked up the scanner and threw it past Paul. He did not intend to hit Paul, and in fact it did not hit him and it did not break. Paul then told the claimant that they should go to the supervisors' office; the claimant said no, that they should go to personnel, so they did. The parties' statements were taken, and the claimant was sent home on suspension and later discharged.

REASONING AND CONCLUSIONS OF LAW:

The issue in this case is whether the employer discharged the claimant for reasons establishing work-connected misconduct as defined by the unemployment insurance law. The issue is not whether the employer was right to terminate the claimant's employment, but whether the claimant is entitled to unemployment insurance benefits. Infante v. IDJS, 364 N.W.2d 262 (Iowa App. 1984). What constitutes misconduct justifying termination of an employee and what is misconduct that warrants denial of unemployment insurance benefits are two separate questions. Pierce v. IDJS, 425 N.W.2d 679 (Iowa App. 1988).

A claimant is not qualified to receive unemployment insurance benefits if an employer has discharged the claimant for reasons constituting work-connected misconduct. Iowa Code section 96.5-2-a. Before a claimant can be denied unemployment insurance benefits, the employer has the burden to establish the claimant was discharged for work-connected misconduct. Cosper v. IDJS, 321 N.W.2d 6 (Iowa 1982).

Iowa Code section 96.5-2-a provides:

An individual shall be disqualified for benefits:

2. Discharge for misconduct. If the department finds that the individual has been discharged for misconduct in connection with the individual's employment:

a. The individual shall be disqualified for benefits until the individual has worked in and has been paid wages for insured work equal to ten times the individual's weekly benefit amount, provided the individual is otherwise eligible.

871 IAC 24.32(1)a provides:

Discharge for misconduct.

(1) Definition.

a. "Misconduct" is defined as a deliberate act or omission by a worker which constitutes a material breach of the duties and obligations arising out of such worker's contract of employment. Misconduct as the term is used in the disqualification provision as being limited to conduct evincing such willful or wanton disregard of an employer's interest as is found in deliberate violation or disregard of standards of behavior which the employer has the right to expect of employees, or in carelessness or negligence of such degree of recurrence as to manifest equal culpability, wrongful intent or evil design, or to show an intentional and substantial disregard of the employer's interests or of the employee's duties and obligations to the employer. On the other hand mere inefficiency, unsatisfactory conduct, failure in good performance as the result of inability or incapacity, inadvertencies or ordinary negligence in isolated instances, or good faith errors in judgment or discretion are not to be deemed misconduct within the meaning of the statute.

This definition has been accepted by the Iowa Supreme Court as accurately reflecting the intent of the legislature. Huntoon v. Iowa Department of Job Service, 275 N.W.2d 445, 448 (Iowa 1979).

The focus of the definition of misconduct is on acts or omissions by a claimant that "rise to the level of being deliberate, intentional or culpable." Henry v. Iowa Department of Job Service, 391 N.W.2d 731, 735 (Iowa App. 1986). The acts must show:

1. Willful and wanton disregard of an employer's interest, such as found in:
 - a. Deliberate violation of standards of behavior that the employer has the right to expect of its employees, or
 - b. Deliberate disregard of standards of behavior the employer has the right to expect of its employees; or
2. Carelessness or negligence of such degree of recurrence as to:
 - a. Manifest equal culpability, wrongful intent or evil design; or
 - b. Show an intentional and substantial disregard of:
 1. The employer's interest, or
 2. The employee's duties and obligations to the employer.

Henry, supra. The reason cited by the employer for discharging the claimant is fighting with the coworker and throwing the scanner. Fighting at work can be misconduct. Savage v. Employment Appeal Board, 529 N.W.2d 640 (Iowa App. 1995). However, a discharge for fighting will not be disqualifying misconduct if the claimant shows 1) failure from fault in bringing on the problem; 2) a necessity to fight back; and 3) attempts to retreat if reasonably possible. Savage, supra. While the claimant perhaps was not where he should have been at the time, as to the encounter becoming physical, it appears that the claimant did not affirmatively provoke the coworker to violence; rather, the coworker was the aggressor. While he should not have thrown the scanner, he did not physically strike the coworker when he threw it in his direction. Under the circumstances of this case, the claimant's throwing of the scanner was the result of inefficiency, unsatisfactory conduct, inadvertence, or ordinary negligence in an isolated instance, and was a good faith error in judgment or discretion. The employer has not met its burden to show disqualifying misconduct. Cosper, supra. Based upon the evidence provided, the claimant's actions were not misconduct within the meaning of the statute, and the claimant is not disqualified from benefits.

DECISION:

The representative's April 24, 2006 decision (reference 01) is affirmed. The employer did discharge the claimant but not for disqualifying reasons. The claimant is qualified to receive unemployment insurance benefits, if he is otherwise eligible.
